

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. My family dinners are uninterrupted and my evenings and weekends are peaceful without the phone ringing 3-4 times a night by some unsolicited telemarketer. I would never buy anything from or even listen too. Indiana's law has virtually eliminated all my unsolicited calls. Most people work hard all day at hectic jobs often dealing with difficult situations and people. They want peace and quiet in the evening and on weekends. They do not need their valuable private time to be interrupted by irritating unwanted phone calls. The telemarketers claim their rights are being violated, what about my right to privacy!
